The Life and Work of Cicely Saunders

Born in 1899 in London, Cicely Saunders wasn't always destined for a career in medicine. However, her experiences with patients suffering from terminal illnesses ignited a passion within her that would change the landscape of healthcare. She observed firsthand the neglect and inadequate care received by those nearing the end of their lives. This prompted her to dedicate her life to providing holistic care, focused on relieving suffering and ensuring a dignified death. Her early experiences, including caring for a Polish Jew who died during World War II, deeply influenced her understanding of the multifaceted needs of dying patients. This included not only physical pain but also emotional, social, and spiritual well-being.

Saunders' commitment to holistic care led her to pursue a career in nursing and later medicine. She spent years researching and developing her innovative approach, ultimately founding St. Christopher's Hospice in Sydenham, London, in 1967. This hospice served as a living laboratory for her revolutionary ideas, becoming a model for hospices around the globe.
